In each installment of Six Months On, we catch up with an early decision student from Duke Kunshan's inaugural undergraduate Class of 2022, to learn about what it's like to make such a big decision at a young age, and to find out about their experiences so far on campus.

A relatively small percentage of students sign early decision agreements, so what made you so confident it was the right choice for you?

You can't be 100 percent confident with any decision, right? But this was something different. We all go into our senior year thinking about where we're going, where to apply, what to look for in a university, and everything else. The mentality of my peers at high school was going either to Britain, the Netherlands or the United States. But I was thinking "Why only these three options?"
